Suffering.

FULL 37 YEARS IN PRISON

He is Released With His Mind Unbalanced and Moore His Death From a Railway Accident.

Jacusov, Mich., Feb. 3 .- A remarkable story of the life of an ex-convict, who suffered half his lifetime as a prisoner behind the walls of the state prison here for a crime of which he was innocent, and was then pardoned, has been revealed in the compilations which ex-Warden General Humphrey has just made public. Edward Murphy is the name of this modern Jean Valjean who met his death a day or so ago in a railroad accident near here. He was been eighty-two years ago in Ireland. but ran away when a lad, working his passage to America. He followed the ea for some years. Going to Chicago later, he feil in love and was married. Having saved a little money, he purchased a small farm near Lockport, Several children were born to the couple, then the mother died. Two years after he married Bridget Mehan, but a little over a year after the second marriage Murphy suddenly left home and saited on a vessel up the lakes. The first mate, John Williams, was a dringing man and abused the sailors, Murphy among the number. At Macmac Murphy quit the vessel in the night, and within two hours of his going, Williams was stabbed and killed.

In the Solitary. Three years later Murphy was rested in Chicago and identified as the nourderer by a sailor named Carson. He was convicted on the testimony of Carson and the reward of $500 was paid to those who arrested him. He spent seven years in the "life solitary." When he went in his hair was as black as in; when he came out, on the abolition of the solitary system, it was white. He knew very little, his mind being affected. Many moves were subsequently made to have him pardoned, but nothing came of the efforts, as all believed him guilty. After many years, Jack Carson, dying in Chicago from a stab received in a saloon row, confessed that he killed Williams and caused the arrest of Murphy for the double purpose of screaning himself and securing half the reward. At once movement was set on foot for Murphy's release, and seven years ago, after an incarceration of thirty-seven years, the much-wronged man was freed. When Murphy left the prison he either had forgotten all about his family in Illinois, or was piqued at them, for he did not go near them. He became a burden on the country, and later his case was taken to the Legislature and by special enactment he was granted a life annuity of $300. Spent Money Foolishly.

He spent much of his money foolishly buying what he did not need. He always dressed in rags, carried dilapidated umbrelias, and wore a big hat, either white or black, far tastically bedeeked with red white and blue rib. bons or pieces of flaunel. He had been a familiar figure about the streets for the past seven years, followed by a crowd of children, of whom he was fond. Many letters were found on his parts of the world, which he had kept s secret from those who knew him. Charles Murphy, a wealthy ranchman, writes to him from Bungerse Junction, Australia, under date of May 20, 1885, calling him brother. Mary Street, "No. 14 Pickwick street, off Park road, Liverpool," and Ann Considine, "Balarst, Australia," both sisters, and Margaret Leary, Longshiny, Liverpool, also a sister, wrote, sending him a "docket for half a sovereign." Barraby Murphy a sovereign better naby Murphy, a son, sent a letter dated August 3, 1863, from Goodings Grove, Will county, Ill., saying he could get a lawyer to get his lather out of prison for $300.

TESTING THE LAW.

The Mortgage Tax Law Has a Hearing in the Supreme Court.

LANSING, Feb. 3 .- Orders to show cause were granted in Petrie vs. Muskegon circuit judge; and other cases; mandamus was granted in Le Grand Wheeler vs. Board of Public Works of Muskegon; mandamus was sought to compet the allowance of his account. Thursday's call, 53, 72, 81, 85, 86, 87,

The arguments upon the motion involving the validity of the new mortgage tax law occupied nearly the entire day.

The principal burden of defending the law fell upon the attorney general, he covering all the points upon which it was attacked, while Mr. McDonald covered only that with reference to taxation of bank security. Mr. Ellis made an able effort in behalf of the law, but was hardly content to rest the case upon its ments without indulging in more or less sentiment, and quoted planks eight and nine of the republican state platform of 1800, and declared that the not as passed was in no sense a political measure, that there was no division from a political standpoint, and now before the law had any trul whatever, and, in consequence of a wail which comes up estensibly in the interest of the borrower it is demanded that it be abundoned.

Justice Champlin made the closing and a very able argument, and cited several cases coming under his own experience showing the ineffective and unjust operation of the law. He hold that it proposed to take the property of one man to pay the obligations of another in violation of the constitu tion of the state. There were no arguments upon the feature of returning to the county system or to the claim that it was tampered with on its way from the legislature to the governor. It is considered certain that the provisions of the law extends to contracts made before its passage, and it is strongly contended that this alone is sufficient to render it unconstitutional on account of a violation of contracts. The principal points raised are that the law is void, upon the ground that makes mortgages pay debts; impairs obligations of contracts; violates corstitutional rule of unitermity; deprives persons of property without the provess of law; that mortgages are in no sense real estate; and that there is no progages in bank assessments, and thereby
